FACT SHEET

The Confederated Tribes of the Warm Springs Indian Reservation of Oregon (“Confederated Tribes of Warm Springs”) is a federally recognized Indian sovereign nation with a reservation located in Central Oregon.

Federal Recognition The Confederated Tribes of Warm Springs signed a Treaty with the U.S. Government on June 25, 1855.

Membership The Tribe currently has 5,216 members.

Form of Government The Confederated Tribes of Warm Springs has an elected tribal council that represents all Tribal membership. The membership delegates certain authorities through the Constitution and Bylaws to the Tribal Council and reserves future powers as needed. A Corporate Charter was established in 1938 that gives the Tribe the authority to transact commerce as a federal corporation. A traditional form of government has existed since time immemorial, which is often referred to as inherent sovereignty. The traditional form still exists and is honored by the contemporary form of government. Today, the Tribal Council has eight elected officials from three districts (Warm Springs, Simnasho and Seekseequa) and three permanent chiefs, representing the Warm Springs, Wasco and Paiute tribes.
